Skateboarding started in California in the 1950s. When the ocean was quiet (quiet), surfers couldn't practice their favorite (favorite) sport, so they wanted to do something else. That's why they started skating.

It then slowly (slow) became more and more popular (popular) and today people all over the world know how to skate. Skaters need to practice hard (hard) until they can do tricks well (good). All skaters sometimes fall off their boards and some get hurt badly (bad) when they try dangerous (dangerous) tricks.

Ausnahme!

Many skaters go skateboarding in empty (empty) parking lots¹ or on the streets.

Not all people react nicely (nice) when they see skaters there. But most cities also have nice (nice) skate parks. The good (good) thing about skate parks is that people don't get angry so easily (easy) and that you can meet other skaters there. If you watch them carefully (careful), you can learn a lot from them.
